Professional Review of Damon Day and Associates

What we have learned from our experience with companies that make numerous claims that they walk on water, is that you should not only turn and run away, but that you should turn and run away quickly.

Damon Day and Associates is one of those companies.

Throughout Damon Day's web site you get bombarded by his claims to be honest, ethical, straightforward, knowledgeable, unbiased, and integral. The fact is Damon Day's web site is nothing more than his self serving tool to make money for Damon Day.

Damon Day's methods of making money and getting new business are very sly and cunning, yet rate a zero when it comes to integrity. One method he uses is to offer a free contract review. He urges people that are considering debt settlement to send in the contract of the company they have spoken with. He says he will review the contract and give his honest assessment.

Do you think he will ever give two thumbs up to that company? Not going to happen.

What he will do is tell you that this company is a bad choice, but lucky for you, he has a recommendation for you. Of course Damon Day's recommendation means money for Damon Day.

Another method Damon Day uses to build his business is to berate and ridicule all of his competitors. We think that whenever anybody resorts to trying to make them selves look good by making everybody else look bad is simply a bad practice in both business and life. Damon Day's web site is full of negative attacks on the competition, and much of his rhetoric is lies and distortions to make them look bad and to build himself up.

Since Damon Day's method of making money is by stealing a client of one company and pointing them Damon Day's direction so Damon Day can get paid, the chances of getting a true "unbiased" opinion are pretty slim. In fact we think the chances of getting an "unbiased" opinion from Damon Day are about zero.

Damon Day also claims to be a "Financial Consultant". We checked with the Securities Exchange Commission - no license. We checked with the Department of Real Estate - no license. We checked with the department of insurance - no license. We checked with the Department of Corporations - no certifications. A "Financial Consultant" with no licenses and no certifications??? Would you hire a contractor to build you a house that isn't licensed? Would you buy a house from a realtor that isn't licensed? Would you buy insurance or get investment advice from agents that aren't licensed? Not only would that be irresponsible, it's also illegal for these people to be providing services that they are not licensed for. Damon Day claims to have gone to school and studied finance. Well that may be a good start, but until he is fully licensed his claims of being a financial consultant are questionable at best, and probably illegal.

We also checked public records and found the Damon Day is involved in multiple lawsuits by creditors and collection agencies. He is also being sued by the IRS and has tax liens against him.

Is this the guy you want to get financial advice from??? He says that he has become an expert because of dealing with his personal financial mess and that qualifies him as a financial consultant. With Damon Day's justification we can assume that next time he goes to the hospital that he will leave and profess to the world that he is now qualified to practice medicine.

What about the company that Damon Day is recommending to help people with their debt?
(The company paying him the referral fee) It looks like they're doing a number on Damon Day.

You want lawsuits? Call Damon Day.

Damon Day resides in California but a call to him will be answered by his assistant in Tennessee.

This may be no big deal, but it is one of those little things that make you wonder; is Damon Day and Associates one of those companies that look good on the internet, but is operating out of his apartment, on the couch, while he is in his pajamas, drinking a beer?

In summary, if you are considering the services provided by Damon Day and Associates - How fast can you run?
